

ARCHITECTURE MASTERPRIZE

2020 has been an extraordinary year, on a truly global scale. Through all human history, there have been very few events to link us together as a species in the way Covid-19 has. Billions of people, from every continent and nation, united by the wide-ranging effects of the pandemic, with local or national lockdowns, sudden restrictions on movement, and the impact the virus has had on employment.

Throughout this, architecture and design have remained a steady, solid constant.

Those stuck at home — with the same view from their window, day after day, the same walls, floors and ceilings surrounding them, or the same, short and necessary route to the grocery store — perhaps began to take notice of their suddenly-limited experience of architecture and design in a different, fresh way. Perhaps they noticed what worked to soothe or inspire, to provide strength in a time of need — and what did the opposite.

Since its conception, the Architecture MasterPrize has always shared the very best of architectural, interior, and landscape design, and 2020 is no different. In these pages, you will find beauty and skill, ingenuity and creativity, and elegant ideas expertly realised — ultimately, things that are needed, more than ever.

Increasingly, we are seeing projects addressing pressing ecological and environmental needs, an understanding that new ways to solve old problems are needed, and a wave of green architecture projects inspiring hope. Architecture has always held a power to change and, if the quality of our entrants is anything to go by, we stand at a point in history where the limits of what was previously possible are now being pushed far beyond, as new technologies and materials enable stunning designs and ideas to be sketched, refined and, ultimately, built.

From our Designs of the Year, through our Best of the Best selection, our Winners, Honorable Mentions, Architectural Products, and our Student Winners, one thing you will notice is a consistency of intelligent thought, of minds working together on problems and finding solutions. This year, this has been reflected to a wider audience, as architects and designers have helped in the fight against Covid-19, volunteering their skills to aid those in need, often at an incredible speed.

For our jurors, themselves brilliant minds from across the architecture and design world, it gets harder and harder to select our winners, as the standard of entries increases every year, and 2020 provided the very best crop yet. As far as problems go, this is a very good one to have.

It is truly an honor and a joy to share and celebrate these projects with you. Congratulations to all our winners — and thank you for sharing your work with us and the wider world.

Finally, if one result of Covid-19 is a revitalised interest and appreciation of design, in the literal fabric that makes up our homes, our workplaces, and the wider environment around us — then this 2020 Architecture MasterPrize book is the perfect place to start.
